

I was raised to believe that a free-market media, that is, one without government control was the best version for everyone. Sadly, I see now how that is wrong. The BBC is the best news source in the world, frequently covering stories that the USA media neglects.

The American people are woefully ignorant by comparison to average citizens in other parts of the world. Giving media companies further chances to consolidate their services, viewpoints, and offerings will only lead to a less-informed society.

Since knowledge is power, that maybe exactly what you are trying to accomplish, but this move does not represent the will of the American people, nor does it uphold the idea of a free press.
